7 (10) and 121.78 (1g) of the statutes; relating to: establishing interdistrict
8 school choice and interdistrict and intradistrict enrollment options programs.

Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, a school district may admit a pupil who resides in another school district if the pupil's parents pay tuition. In addition, a pupil may attend a public school located outside his or her school district of residence if the 2 school boards agree, the state superintendent of public instruction approves and the school district of residence pays tuition.

This bill creates an interdistrict school choice program. Beginning in the 1996-97 school year, the bill provides that a pupil may attend any public school located outside his or her school district of residence if the pupil's parent complies with certain application dates and procedures, and requires the school district of residence to pay tuition or an amount agreed to between the 2 school districts. The school district of residence continues to count the pupil in enrollment for state aid purposes.

The school board of attendance may reject an application only if there is no space available in the school or program or the pupil is involved in a disciplinary proceeding. The school board must reject an application, however, if acceptance would violate a plan to reduce racial imbalance in the school district or would be harmful to the efforts of the school board to achieve racial balance in the school district. Similarly, a school district may prohibit a resident pupil from attending school in another school district if the pupil is involved in a disciplinary proceeding. A school district must prohibit a resident pupil from attending school in another school district if allowing such attendance would violate a plan to reduce racial imbalance in the school district or would be harmful to the efforts of the school board to achieve racial balance in the school district.

The parent of a pupil whose application is rejected or who is prohibited from attending school in another school district by the school district of residence may appeal the decision to the state superintendent, whose decision is final.

The bill provides that the parents of a pupil who attends a school in another school district are responsible for transporting the pupil. However, if either school district provides transportation, it is eligible for state transportation aid.

Beginning in the 1996-97 school year, this bill allows a pupil enrolled in a public school to attend a public school in another school district to take one or more courses under certain circumstances. The pupil must continue to attend school in his or her school district of residence for at least one course; the school board of the other school district must determine that there is space available; the school board of the resident school district must not offer, or have space available in, a comparable course; if the course is offered in the high school grades, the school board of the resident school district must determine that the course satisfies high school graduation requirements; and the pupil must meet all of the prerequisites for the course.

Acceptance and rejection criteria and procedures for the interdistrict enrollment options program are identical to the acceptance and rejection criteria and procedures for the interdistrict school choice program.

The school board of the school district of residence must pay to the school board of the other school district an amount equal to the cost of providing a course to a nonresident pupil under the program, as determined by the state superintendent.

Beginning in the 1996-97 school year, this bill allows a pupil enrolled in a public school to attend a public school located within the pupil's school district of residence but outside the pupil's attendance area under certain circumstances. The school board must determine that there is space available and the pupil must meet all of the prerequisites for the course.

The bill provides that the school board may not reject an application to attend a school in a different attendance area based on the pupil's academic achievement. In addition, the provision described above regarding acceptance or rejection based on the effect on the school district's plans to reduce racial imbalance applies to the intradistrict enrollment options program.

The bill allows a school board that is participating in a special transfer program to reduce racial imbalance (commonly known as chapter 220) or in a merged attendance area program to reduce racial imbalance to modify the application deadlines established in this bill if the deadlines would conflict with chapter 220 or merged attendance area program procedures.

In addition, the parent of a pupil who resides in a school district participating in one of the integration programs must submit the application to attend another school district to the school board of the school district of residence for approval.

The bill also authorizes the state superintendent to modify any provision contained in the interdistrict and intradistrict programs if he or she agrees with the school board that the provision is harmful to the integration program or to the school district's efforts to achieve racial balance.

For further information see the state and local fiscal estimate, which will be printed as an appendix to this bill.
