Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Current law prohibits a person from appearing before the board of review to contest the assessed value of the person's property if the person has refused a reasonable written request from the assessor to view the property or if the property is valued using the income method and the person has not provided income information to the assessor. A person who is prohibited from appearing before the board of review is also barred from filing a claim for an excessive assessment with the taxation district.

This bill allows a person who has refused a reasonable written request to view the person's property to appear before the board of review to contest the property's assessed value and, ultimately, to file a claim with the taxation district for an excessive assessment. The bill also provides that the assessor may not increase the value of a person's property based on the person's refusal to allow entry to the assessor. In addition, the bill requires an assessor to provide written notice to each owner of residential property regarding the property owner's right to refuse entry to his or her residence for property tax assessment purposes. Finally, the bill allows a person who has not complied with a request to provide income information to the assessor to file a claim for an excessive assessment even though the person is prohibited from appearing before the board of review.

The people of the state of Wisconsin, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

1           SECTION 1. 70.05 (4m) of the statutes is amended to read:

2           70.05 (4m) A taxation district assessor may not enter upon a person's real 3 property for purposes of conducting an assessment under this chapter more than 4 once in each year, except that an assessor may enter upon a person's real property 5 for purposes of conducting an assessment under this chapter more often if the 6 property owner consents. A property owner may deny entry to an assessor if the 7 owner has given prior notice to the assessor that the assessor may not enter the 8 property without the property owner's permission. Each taxation district assessor 9 shall create and maintain a database identifying all such property owners in the 10 taxation district. A property owner's refusal to allow the assessor to enter the 11 owner's property shall not preclude the property owner from appearing before the 12 board of review to object to the property's valuation, as provided under s. 70.47 (7), 13 and the assessor may not increase the property's valuation based on the property 14 owner's refusal to allow entry.

15           SECTION 2. 70.05 (4n) of the statutes is created to read:

16           70.05 (4n) (a) If a taxation district assessor is requesting to view the interior 17 of a residence, the assessor shall provide written notice to the property owner of the
