Adult stem cells at work: Personal experience for pastor in Janesville

By Julianne Nornberg
CATHOLIC HERALD STAFF

JANESVILLE — It was after a routine check-up in the spring of 1996 that Fr. Michael Doro, pastor of St. John Vianney Parish here, learned he had cancer.

Even after oral treatment, the cancer developed into mantle cell lymphoma, which eats away at the digestive system.

"They said it would come back and keep getting worse," said Doro. So it was decided that (after chemotherapy which would destroy the cancerous cells) he would have a stem cell transplant from his own cancer-free bone marrow to put the cancer into remission.

Using own stem cells

After stem cells were taken from his blood, in August 2000 Doro had one more round of chemotherapy, then three days later his own stem cells were put back into his blood stream at University Hospital in Madison.

"They can freeze them for years and years until the transplant takes place," said Doro.

He explained that when the stem cells are put in, the cells "know where to go and what to do."

"With adult stem cells, there's nothing unethical about it and it's showing real potential," he said, pointing out that "we all have stem cells. Eventually it will be much better where they can do it."

in a much easier way. It's an area that will be continued and it certainly does not destroy life."

After his transplant, Doro continues to go in for check-ups, consisting of blood tests and CAT scans to monitor whether or not the cancer has returned.

"I have to retake shots taken

Fr. Michael Doro

as a child for diseases like polio because chemo kills everything in the immune system," he noted.

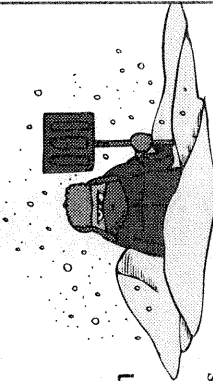

He also was in isolation for four months as well and had to wear a mask when traveling.

Chemotherapy, in addition to killing cancerous cells, also destroys all the bacteria in the digestive system, so one has to learn how to eat again and the digestive system has to be regenerated, Doro explained.

Now, Doro says he still tires more quickly, but he's doing most things at the parish, except giving out Communion at major Masses.

Power of faith

Doro said what has gotten him through this is the support of family, friends, parishioners, and "the thousands of people praying for me," he said. "I certainly wouldn't be here without the faith and prayers that were said.

"Through all this you've got to believe in God and that he can help and that, with help of modern medicine and technicians, miracles are possible."
