Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

Since the 2003 changes to the statute, the department has experienced no discernible reduction in the number of wage complaints filed that involve managerial employees or commissioned salespersons. Even though the employees are not covered under the law, the department still must investigate the wage complaints to determine whether the complaining person truly falls into the exempt category. These types of determinations are not always simple, and often take as long as investigating other complaints. For this reason, the department does not anticipate that passage of the bill would increase its workload. No procedural changes would be necessary.

Long-Range Fiscal Implications

None.
