Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

This bill eliminates provisions in current law that excepts spiritual treatment of a child in the law criminalizing physical abuse, including intentional causation of bodily harm, reckless causation of bodily harm, and failure by persons responsible for a child's welfare to act to prevent bodily harm. In addition, the bill provides that a county department of social services that receives a report of suspected or threatened abuse or neglect may not base a determination that a child, member of the child's family, or a child's guardian is in need of services solely on the fact that the child's parent or guardian has cultural or religious child-rearing beliefs that differ from general community standards, unless they present a specific danger to the physical or emotional health or safety of the child.

Prosecutors believe that such cases would be quite complex, but cannot determine if this bill would result in more cases being prosecuted, or if it would make it simpler to prosecute these cases. Due to the infrequency of such cases, it is difficult to quantify any fiscal effect this bill may have of District Attorney offices. Consequently, a fiscal estimate is indeterminate.

Long-Range Fiscal Implications

Prosecutors cannot predict if there will be a long-term fiscal impact on their offices should this bill be enacted.
