Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

AB-248 would require each of Wisconsin's 16 technical colleges to incorporate financial literacy into orientation programs for newly entering students, which could increase costs of these programs. In addition, colleges may already offer financial literacy workshops or online courses that are open to all students. All students seeking publicly funded student loans also are required to take part in online entrance counseling before receiving their loan (and exit counseling when leaving college). The entrance and exit counseling addresses financial literacy.

It is unclear whether existing methods that colleges may already use to offer financial literacy but that may be outside of new student orientation would comply with the new requirements in AB-248. If these requirements fulfill the statutory intent of AB-248, then the new requirements would represent only minor cost increases. If the bill requires modifications or additions to existing efforts, the costs of complying with the new requirements would increase.
