Description Limiting the number of annual revocations of extended supervision and parole for violations that are not a crime

Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

Under current law, a person may be released from prison to the community on parole or under extended supervision, and must comply with certain conditions relating to his/her behavior. If they violate a condition, the person's release may be revoked.

Under this bill, no more than 3,000 revocations and returns to prison may be ordered for violations of conditions of parole or extended supervision that are not crimes.

Prosecutors do not believe there will be a fiscal effect on their offices should this bill be enacted.

Long-Range Fiscal Implications

No long-term fiscal impact on District Attorney offices is expected should this bill be enacted.
