Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, a child whom a law enforcement officer, emergency medical technician, or hospital staff member reasonably believes to be 72 hours old or younger (newborn child) may be taken into custody under circumstances in which a parent of the newborn child relinquishes custody of the newborn child to the law enforcement officer, emergency medical technician, or hospital staff member and does not express an intent to return for the newborn child (commonly referred to as the “safe haven law”). A law enforcement officer, emergency medical technician, or hospital staff member who takes a newborn child into custody under the safe haven law must take any action necessary to protect the health and safety of the newborn child and, within 24 hours after taking the newborn child into custody must deliver the newborn child to the intake worker of the court assigned to exercise jurisdiction under the Children’s Code. A parent who relinquishes custody of a child under the safe haven law and any person who assists in such a relinquishment have the right to remain anonymous.

This substitute amendment permits a parent to relinquish custody of a child 30 days old or younger under the safe haven law. The substitute amendment also permits a health care clinic staff member to take a child into custody under that law. The substitute amendment also clarifies that medical records of a child who is relinquished may not be disclosed except under certain circumstances.

In addition, the substitute amendment prohibits an Indian child from being relinquished under the safe haven law before the child is 11 days old and requires a law enforcement officer, emergency medical technician, or hospital or health care clinic staff member who takes a child into custody under the safe haven law to make a reasonable effort to ascertain whether the child is an Indian child and to obtain any relevant information relating to the tribal affiliation of the child, unless the parent or child is admitted to the hospital or receives health care services from the health care clinic, in which case a hospital or health care clinic staff member must ascertain whether the child is an Indian child and must obtain any relevant information relating to the tribal affiliation of the child. If a parent who relinquishes custody of an Indian child or any person assisting in such a relinquishment provides any personally identifiable information to a person authorized to take the child into custody, that parent or other person is assumed to have waived his or her right to anonymity. If the intake worker to whom a child is delivered under the safe haven law knows or has reason to know that the child is an Indian child, the intake worker must notify the Indian child's tribe, and the Wisconsin and federal Indian child welfare acts apply to any child custody proceeding involving the Indian child.

Under current law, a hospital administrator or his or her designee, if a birth occurred at or on route to a hospital; a physician in the absence of a hospital administrator; or an individual who was in attendance at a birth or the mother or father must prepare and file a birth certificate within five days after the infant's birth. Also, any person who assumes custody of a live born infant with unknown parents (foundling) must file a birth certificate within five days after assuming custody. A birth certificate for a foundling is not required to contain the name of the mother or the father of the infant but is required to be marked foundling by the local registrar who accepts the foundling birth certificate for filing. Currently, if the birth certificate filed at the time of birth for a foundling is found or the foundling is adopted and the adoptive parents sign a birth record giving their names as the adoptive parents, the state registrar is required to impound the foundling birth certificate.

The substitute amendment clarifies that a person must file a foundling birth certificate for an infant who is relinquished under the safe haven law in addition to filing a foundling birth certificate for a live born infant of unknown parentage. The substitute amendment requires any person who is required to file a foundling birth certificate and either files or knows of the filing of a birth certificate at the time of birth to notify the state registrar that the birth certificate filed at the time of birth and the foundling birth certificate are for the same infant so the state registrar may impound a birth certificate. Under the substitute amendment, when a birth certificate filed at the time of birth is located for a foundling or if a person notifies the state registrar of the birth certificate filed at the time of birth for a foundling, the state registrar must impound the birth certificate filed at the time of birth instead of the foundling birth certificate. The substitute amendment maintains the current requirement for the state registrar to impound the foundling birth certificate for foundlings who are adopted and for whom the adoptive parents sign a birth record giving their names as the adoptive parents. The substitute amendment also clarifies that the filing of a birth certificate at the time of birth does not affect a person's obligation to file a foundling birth certificate if that person assumes custody of a relinquished child. Similarly, the filing of a foundling birth certificate does not affect the obligation of a person who is required to file a birth certificate at the time of birth to file that birth certificate.
