Whereas, in 1947, the legislature created the Legislative Council as a means of using study committees and professional staff to enhance the legislature’s ability to address and find competent solutions for the pressing issues of the day, and to have legislation drafted in advance of the session to allow more time for consideration of the proposals by the legislature as a whole; and

Whereas, Mr. Habermann guided the Legislative Council through its critical first year, a time when success was not assured, as stated in the Milwaukee Journal upon the commencement of the first interim studies: “The Council idea itself is on trial in Wisconsin at this time. On the showing made will depend whether or not the Council will be retained as a permanent part of our legislative machinery.”; and

Whereas, Mr. Habermann managed and supported the work of 11 active study committees, developed procedures for the conduct of study committees that continue to be used today, conducted a pre-session conference for the education of new legislators, and completed a 140–page report on law enforcement in Wisconsin which laid the groundwork for a highway safety program; and

Whereas, Mr. Habermann moved on after one year with the Legislative Council to continue his institution–building, as the first director of the Wisconsin State Bar Association, an organization that he served as director until his retirement in 1974; and

Whereas, upon the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the creation of the Legislative Council, celebrated in 1997, Mr. Habermann sent a letter with several comments, including this fond recollection: “It was great to be on the ground floor and to help get the Council off to a sound start in the right direction. I look back with great pleasure to those days and the many friends that I made in the legislature.”; now, therefore, be it
