Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under this bill, a person who is convicted of homicide by intoxicated use of a vehicle must be sentenced to a period of confinement in prison of at least five years. Under the bill, if the decedent was a passenger in the person's car, a court may sentence the person to a period of confinement that is less than the minimum if the court finds that the best interests of the community will be served and that the public will not be harmed. If the court sentences a person to a period of confinement that is less than the minimum, the bill requires the court to put its findings in writing.
