ASSEMBLY BILL 296

1 statutes; relating to: sentences for felony offenses, parole, eliminating
2 extended supervision and providing penalties.

Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

This bill eliminates the changes made by 1997 Wisconsin Act 283 (the “truth in sentencing” act) to felony penalties and to the structure of felony sentences. Specifically, the bill does the following:

Felony penalties

Current law provides penalties for felonies, which are crimes punishable by imprisonment of more than one year. A felony created in the criminal code is put in one of six classes (Class A, B, BC, C, D or E) and each class has a specific maximum term of imprisonment and a maximum fine. Class A felonies are punishable by life imprisonment. For crimes committed before December 31, 1999, the maximum terms of imprisonment for the other classes of felonies are as follows:

Class B	40 years
Class BC	20 years
Class C	10 years
Class D	5 years
Class E	2 years

1997 Wisconsin Act 283 (the “truth in sentencing” act) increased these maximum terms of imprisonment for felonies that are committed on or after December 31, 1999. The maximum terms of imprisonment for the classes of felonies under 1997 Wisconsin Act 283 are as follows:

Class B	60 years
Class BC	30 years
Class C	15 years
Class D	10 years
Class E	5 years

1997 Wisconsin Act 283 also increased penalties for nonclassified felony offenses committed on or after December 31, 1999. The penalties are increased by 50% or one year, whichever is greater. Thus, under 1997 Wisconsin Act 283, a maximum penalty of one year of imprisonment will increase to two years of imprisonment, while a maximum penalty of five years of imprisonment will increase to seven years and six months.

This bill eliminates all of the penalty increases made by 1997 Wisconsin Act 283 and restores the penalties provided for offenses committed before December 31, 1999.

ASSEMBLY BILL 296The structure of felony sentences

1. The structure of prison sentences for felony offenses committed before December 31, 1999. If a person who commits a felony before December 31, 1999, is sentenced to prison, the person will usually have three possible ways of being released from prison on parole: discretionary parole granted by the parole commission (for which a person is usually eligible after serving 25% of the sentence or six months, whichever is greater); mandatory release on parole (usually granted automatically after the person serves two-thirds of the sentence); or special action parole release by the secretary of corrections (a program designed to relieve prison crowding).

However, the person could be subject to different parole eligibility provisions if the person is a serious felony offender. If a serious felony offender has one or more prior convictions for a serious felony, a judge may set a discretionary parole eligibility date for the offender that is later than 25% of the sentence or six months but not later than the mandatory release date of two-thirds of the sentence. In addition, serious felony offenders need not be automatically released when they reach their mandatory release dates. Instead, the parole commission may deny mandatory release to such an offender in order to protect the public or because the offender refused to participate in counseling or treatment. The serious felony offenders covered by these parole provisions include persons convicted of serious violations such as homicide, battery, sexual assault, mayhem, kidnapping, taking hostages, tampering with household products, arson, armed burglary, armed robbery, carjacking, assault by a prisoner, crimes against children and controlled substances.

If a person is sentenced to life imprisonment for an offense committed before December 31, 1999, the person usually must serve 20 years minus time calculated under the mandatory release formula before he or she is eligible for release on parole. If the person does not receive extensions due to violations of prison rules, he or she reaches parole eligibility after serving 13 years, four months. However, a judge may set a parole eligibility date for a person serving a life sentence that is later than the usual parole eligibility date or may provide that the person is not eligible for parole. Also, if a person has two convictions for any of certain serious felonies and is then convicted a third time for another serious felony, he or she must be sentenced to life without parole (the so-called “three strikes, you’re out” law). Likewise, if a person has one conviction for any of certain serious child sex offenses and is then convicted a second time for another serious child sex offense, he or she must be sentenced to life without parole (the so-called “two strikes, you’re out” law for serious child sex offenders). No person serving a life sentence of any kind is entitled to mandatory release.

2. The structure of prison sentences for felony offenses committed on or after December 31, 1999. Under 1997 Wisconsin Act 283, if a court chooses to sentence a felony offender to a term of imprisonment in state prison for a felony committed on or after December 31, 1999, the court must do so by imposing a bifurcated sentence that includes a term of confinement in prison followed by a term of community supervision. The offender is not eligible for parole. A bifurcated sentence imposed under the bill must be structured as follows:

ASSEMBLY BILL 296

1) The total length of the bifurcated sentence may not exceed the maximum term of imprisonment allowable for the felony.

2) The court must set the term of confinement in prison portion of the sentence to be at least one year but not more than 40 years for a Class B felony, 20 years for a Class BC felony, ten years for a Class C felony, five years for a Class D felony, or two years for a Class E felony. If the person is being sentenced for a felony that is not in one of these classes, the term of confinement in prison portion of the sentence must be at least one year but not more than 75% of the total length of the bifurcated sentence.

3) The term of community supervision must equal at least 25% of the length of the term of confinement in prison.

Thus, for example, if a person is convicted of a Class B felony committed on or after December 31, 1999, and a judge sentenced the person to the maximum allowable 40-year term of confinement in prison, the term of community supervision would have to be at least ten years but could not be more than 20 years.

After the person completes the term of confinement in prison portion of the sentence, he or she serves the term of community supervision in which he or she is subject to conditions set by both the court and the department of corrections (DOC) and is subject to supervision by DOC. If a person violates a condition of community supervision, community supervision may be revoked and the person may be returned to serve a period of time in prison.

If a person is sentenced to life imprisonment for a crime committed on or after December 31, 1999, he or she is not eligible for parole. Instead, the judge who is sentencing the person to life imprisonment must do one of the following: 1) provide that the person is eligible for community supervision after serving 20 years; 2) set a date on which the person becomes eligible for community supervision, as long as that date requires the person to serve at least 20 years; or 3) provide that the person is not eligible for community supervision. If the court provides that the person is eligible for community supervision, the person may petition the sentencing court for release to community supervision on or after the community supervision eligibility date. A person sentenced to life who is released to community supervision is on community supervision for the remainder of his or her life and, like a person on community supervision under a bifurcated sentence (see above), may have his or her community supervision revoked and be returned to prison if he or she violates a condition of community supervision. The bill does not affect persons sentenced to life imprisonment without the possibility of parole under the "three strikes, you're out" or "two strikes, you're out" laws.

3. What this bill does. This bill eliminates the sentencing procedure created in 1997 Wisconsin Act 283. Thus, under the bill a prison sentence for a felony that is committed on or after the date the bill becomes law will be structured in the same way as prison sentences for offenses committed before December 31, 1999.
