3 animals with a contagious disease and providing a penalty.

Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Current law prohibits a person from intentionally introducing a contagious or infectious disease into livestock without the consent of the owner of the livestock. Current law also prohibits a person from intentionally introducing a contagious or infectious disease into wild deer without the consent of the department of natural resources (DNR). A person who violates either of these prohibitions may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 15 years or both.

This bill prohibits a person from introducing, through reckless conduct, a contagious or infectious disease other than paratuberculosis (Johne's disease) into livestock without the consent of the owner of the livestock. The bill also prohibits a person from introducing, through reckless conduct, a contagious or infectious disease other than paratuberculosis into wild deer without DNR's consent. A person who violates either of these prohibitions may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than nine months or both. These prohibitions do not apply if the actor's conduct is undertaken pursuant to a directive issued by the department of agriculture, trade and consumer protection (DATCP) or an agreement between the actor and DATCP, if the purpose of the directive or the agreement is to prevent or control the spread of the disease.
