Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, the medical examining board (board) may certify persons who meet certain education, examination and other requirements as physician assistants. A physician assistant is defined as a person who performs patient services under the supervision and direction of a licensed physician. Only a person who holds a physician assistant certificate may call himself or herself a "physician assistant” or use the title “physician assistant” or any other titles, letters or designation which represents him or her as a physician assistant. While a person may, under current law, practice as a physician assistant without a certificate or license, no certified physician assistant may be self-employed, and his or her employer must assume legal responsibility for any patient care undertaken by the physician assistant during his or her employment.

SENATE BILL 156

In addition, under current law, a physician assistant may not prescribe drugs or medical devices. However, under rules promulgated by the board, a physician assistant may prepare a prescription order in accordance with written protocols and certain other requirements, including requirements that a supervising physician review the prescription order.

This bill makes a number of changes to current law relating to physician assistants. Among the changes the bill makes are the following:

1. The bill defines “physician assistant” as a person who provides medical care (instead of who performs patient services) with physician supervision and direction.

2. The bill provides that, with exceptions, no person may practice as a physician assistant or use prohibited titles, letters or designation unless he or she is licensed by the board as a physician assistant.

This bill permits a physician assistant licensed by the board to prescribe drugs, other than schedule I controlled substances, and prescription medical devices in accordance with guidelines established by a supervising physician and the physician assistant.

For further information see the state fiscal estimate, which will be printed as an appendix to this bill.
