

the change of venue has been ordered, the defendant or the state may move to place the action for trial upon the calendar of the pending term and the court may, in its discretion, grant or deny said motion or order the same upon its own motion. If said motion is not made or is denied the court may order the defendant to appear for trial at the next regular term of said court. In case the petit jury for such pending term has been discharged the court may order them resummoned in such manner as the court shall direct; and, in case no petit jury has been summoned for the pending term, the court may resummon in such manner as the court shall direct the petit jury of the previous term and shall proceed with the trial of the said action in the same manner and with the same powers as though said petit jury had been regularly summoned for said pending term.
