Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, child or family support may be expressed in a judgment or order as a fixed sum, as a percentage of a parent's income, or as a combination of the two in the alternative by requiring payment of the greater or lesser of either a percentage of a parent's income or a fixed sum. In order to revise a judgment or order with respect to an amount of child or family support, the court must find that there has been a substantial change in the circumstances of at least one of the parties. This bill requires that child or family support be expressed as a fixed sum in a judgment or order, including a temporary order. The bill also provides that the court is not required to make a finding of a substantial change in circumstances to change the manner of expressing the amount of child or family support to a fixed sum in a judgment or order in which the amount of child or family support is expressed as a percentage, or as a percentage or a fixed sum in the alternative.

SENATE BILL 106

Under current law, the parties to an action affecting the family are required to disclose all of their assets, including income, on a financial disclosure form. If the court orders child or family support in the action, the court must order the party who must pay support to furnish a financial disclosure form annually, and may order that party to furnish copies of his or her most recently filed state and federal income tax returns annually, to the payee of the support and, if the state is a real party in interest, such as when a dependent child involved in the action is receiving medical assistance, to the county child support agency. The bill eliminates the requirement that the court order the support payer to furnish a financial disclosure form to the payee of the support and to the county child support agency but requires, instead of authorizes, the court to order the support payer to furnish copies of his or her most recently filed state and federal income tax returns annually to the payee of the support.

Finally, current law provides that a child support order that is expressed as a fixed sum may provide for an annual adjustment in the support amount, based on a change in the payer's income. The adjustment is not automatic, however; the payee of the support must apply to the family court commissioner for the actual adjustment. The bill requires every child or family support order that is expressed as a fixed sum to provide for an annual adjustment in the support amount, based on a change in the payer's income, and still requires application to the family court commissioner for the adjustment to take effect. Since an adjustment would be a decrease in the support amount if the payer's income decreased, the bill provides that either party, not just the payee, may apply for the adjustment. If the family court commissioner receives an application for an adjustment, the family court commissioner must send notice to the other party, who may request a hearing on whether the adjustment should go into effect. If a hearing is held, the family court commissioner may direct that all or part of the adjustment not go into effect until such time as directed by the family court commissioner if: 1) as under current law, the payer establishes that extraordinary circumstances beyond his or her control prevent fulfillment of the adjustment; 2) the payee establishes that the payer has voluntarily and unreasonably reduced his or her income below his or her earning capacity; or 3) the party who requested the hearing establishes that the adjustment would be unfair to the child.
