Dear Representative Walker:

This is a follow-up to the Department of Corrections (DOC) testimony on Assembly Bill 95 relating to Restricting Internet Access by Persons Convicted of Certain Child Sex Crimes. I have enclosed several documents requested by Representative Suder, including a copy of the DOC Testimony notes and a listing of DOC Specialized Rules of Supervision for Persons Convicted of Sex Crimes.

I would also like to take this opportunity to clarify a couple of points relating to our testimony and subsequent committee questions on the proposed legislation:

1. We were asked to send a recommended list of additional crimes that should be included in the bill. The department does not recommend enumerating additional criminal offenses. The issue related to plea bargaining remains even with an expanded list of crimes. It is recommended that language be considered which allows DOC or the court to impose internet restrictions for a person convicted of any crime, as deemed appropriate. This allows a check and balance for plea-bargaining and ensures that the court or department may be able to impose this restriction on offenders convicted of other, non-sexual crimes. This comment may also be relevant to those sections of AB 95 pertaining to the Department of Health and Family Services.
2. As mentioned in Tony Streveler's testimony, it is recommended that the use of the term "Internet" be expanded to include "Bulletin Boards or any other electronic means of communication or access through the use of a computer modem or internet service".
3. Although not addressed in our testimony, it is recommended that the committee consider eliminating the Parole Commissions' mandate to make a decision as to whether a person convicted of one of these crimes can/can not have access to the internet. With the recommended changes in #1 above, the court of conviction or department will have sufficient authority to impose this restriction. Conditions or restrictions imposed by the Parole Commission are considered advisory to the Department as part of the offender's release plan. Conditions or restrictions imposed by the Department carry the same weight as conditions set forth by the court.

Thank you for considering our comments. If you need any additional information, please let me know.

Sincerely,

6 type of supervised or conditional release. after being convicted of a crime

Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under this bill, if a person is placed on parole, probation or other type of supervised or conditional release after committing a child sex crime, the court or agency releasing the person must ~~must~~ decide whether to restrict or prohibit the person's use of or access to the internet as a condition of release. (The child sex crimes covered by the bill are first and second degree sexual assault of a child, repeated sexual assault of a child, sexual exploitation of a child, causing a child to view or listen to sexual activity, child enticement, soliciting a child for prostitution, exposing a child to harmful material or to harmful narrations or descriptions and possession of child pornography.) The following sections of this analysis describe in more detail both current law concerning these types of release and the changes made in current law by this bill.

or certain electronic communication systems

ASSEMBLY BILL 95Persons placed on probation or released from state prison on parole or extended supervision

Currently, a person convicted of a felony (a crime that carries a maximum sentence of imprisonment of one or more years in state prison) may be sentenced to imprisonment in state prison or may be placed on probation. If a person convicted of a felony committed before December 31, 1999, is sentenced to imprisonment in state prison, he or she is eligible for parole and will usually have three possible ways of being released on parole: 1) discretionary parole granted by the parole commission (for which a person is usually eligible after serving 25% of the sentence or six months, whichever is greater); 2) mandatory release on parole (usually granted automatically after the person serves two-thirds of the sentence); or 3) special action parole release by the secretary of corrections (a program designed to relieve prison crowding). A person released on parole is subject to conditions of parole established by the parole commission and by the department of corrections (DOC).

If a person convicted of a felony committed on or after December 31, 1999, is sentenced to imprisonment in state prison, he or she is not eligible for parole but will be eligible for release to the community under extended supervision on a date set by the court at the time of sentencing. A person released on extended supervision is subject to conditions of extended supervision established by the sentencing court and by DOC.

Finally, if a person convicted of a felony is not sentenced to prison but is instead placed on probation, the person is subject to conditions of probation established by the sentencing court and by DOC.

Under this bill, when the parole commission paroles a person from a prison sentence imposed for a child sex crime, the parole commission must decide whether to restrict or prohibit the person's use of or access to the internet as a condition of parole. Likewise, if a court sentences a person to prison for a child sex crime committed on or after December 31, 1999, the court must decide whether to restrict or prohibit the person's use of or access to the internet as a condition of extended supervision. Finally, if a court places a person on probation for a child sex crime, the court must decide whether to restrict or prohibit the person's use of or access to the internet as a condition of probation. If the parole commission or a court decides not to impose such a condition of parole, extended supervision or probation, DOC may impose the condition.

Persons released from institutional care after being found not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect

Currently, if a person is found not guilty of a felony by reason of mental disease or defect, he or she is committed to the custody of the department of health and family services (DHFS). When committing a person found not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect, a court must specify whether the person is to be placed in institutional care or on conditional release. If a person is placed in institutional care, he or she may petition for conditional release if at least six months have passed since the initial commitment order was entered. A person on conditional release is subject to the custody and control of DHFS and must abide by conditions set by the court and by the rules of DHFS. Current law also provides that, under certain circumstances, the director of a treatment facility at which a person is placed in institutional care may allow the person to be discharged under supervision, to be conditionally transferred to the custody of a legal guardian or other person or to take a temporary home visit or temporary leave from the institution.

ASSEMBLY BILL 95

Under this bill, if a person who has been found not guilty of a child sex crime by reason of mental disease or defect is placed on conditional release by a court, the court must decide whether to restrict or prohibit the person's use of or access to the internet as a condition of release and, if the court decides not to impose such a condition of release, DHFS may impose the condition. In addition, if such a person is conditionally transferred, discharged under supervision or given a temporary home visit or leave, DHFS must decide whether to restrict or prohibit the person's use of or access to the internet as a condition of release.

Persons released from institutional care after being found to be a sexually violent person

Current law provides a procedure for the involuntary civil commitment of sexually violent persons. A sexually violent person is a person who has committed certain sexually violent offenses and who is dangerous because he or she suffers from a mental disorder that makes it substantially probable that the person will engage in acts of sexual violence. A person who has been found to be a sexually violent person is committed to DHFS for control, care and treatment. The person may be committed to institutional care in an appropriate facility or the court may order the person to be placed on supervised release. In addition, a person initially committed to institutional care may later be granted supervised release by a court if it is no longer substantially probable that the person will engage in acts of sexual violence if he or she is not confined in institutional care. A sexually violent person who is placed on supervised release is subject to conditions of release set by the court and to the rules of release established by DHFS.

This bill provides that if a court places a sexually violent person on supervised release the court must decide whether to restrict or prohibit the person's use of or access to the internet as a condition of supervised release. If the court decides not to impose such a condition of supervised release, DHFS may impose the condition.

Persons paroled from a commitment under the sex crimes law

Under prior law, persons who were convicted of certain sex crimes could, upon conviction, be committed to DHFS for specialized treatment in an appropriate institution. Although no person could be committed under this prior law after July 1, 1980, there are persons committed before that date who remain in the custody of DHFS. A person committed to DHFS for specialized care may be paroled if it appears to DHFS that the person is capable of making an acceptable adjustment in society. This bill provides that, if DHFS paroles a person convicted of a sex crime and committed for specialized treatment, DHFS must decide whether to restrict or prohibit the person's use of or access to the internet as a condition of parole.
