Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

This bill would eliminate the current possibility of probation and it would mandate state prison time of at least one year for persons convicted of certain sex offenses. It eliminates the possibility of either probation or of county jail time for less than one year. The loss of sentencing flexibility will probably increase the number of trials, thus increasing the workload of District Attorneys' offices. However, the nature of these offenses is such that DA offices are generally seeking the higher sentences that would be required by this bill. Thus the additional workload may be minor given current practice.

Long-Range Fiscal Implications

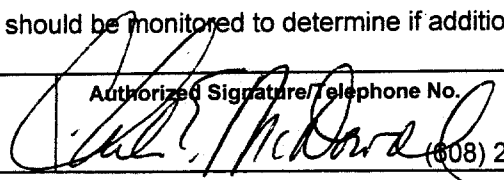

May significantly increase DA workload so it should be monitored to determine if additional resources are needed.
