Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, the secretary of ~~the Department of Health and Family Services~~ health and family services must appoint and may assign duties to a state health officer. No qualifications are required for appointment as the state health officer. The state health officer is required to appoint state epidemiologists for program areas of acute and communicable diseases, occupational and environmental diseases, maternal and child health and chronic diseases and to appoint chief medical officers to provide consultation and leadership to state health programs. (The chief medical officers also serve as state epidemiologists and have those powers designated them by the state health officer to enforce state health laws and advise state and local officials on certain health matters.) In addition, the state health officer is authorized to appoint advisory and examining bodies.
