Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate:

The bill changes the way the register of deeds records documents. As an example, current law says the register of deeds must record maps. Under the bill, the register of deeds will record all plats and certified survey maps. The bill increases the workload for the register of deeds by increasing the amount of material that must be recorded for each transaction.

The Office of Land Information Services (OLIS) is the only program in DOA that primarily interacts with the register of deeds. OLIS agrees that there will be a modest increased workload for the register of deeds, but the increase is sufficient enough to be managed with existing local base resources. Under the bill, there is no increased responsibility for OLIS. The bill may confuse the platting process, and Plat Review, a component of OLIS, may be impacted, but the impact will be negligible.

The bill does not impact fees currently brought into OLIS.

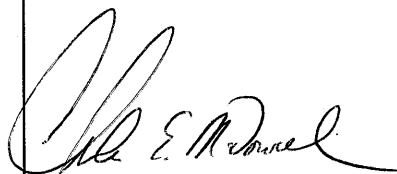

At the local level there will be no change in the amount of filing, just more information to be filed per transaction.
