Fiscal Estimate Narratives

DNR 10/17/01

Subject Prohibition against persons with criminal history from purchasing hunting approvals

Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

Bill Summary:

The proposed language requires the DNR to request that the department of justice conduct a background check for each person who applies for a firearm hunting license, and the department of justice shall conduct the search. If the search shows that the person is prohibited from possessing a firearm, the DNR shall revoke any current hunting license issued to that person and shall deny any subsequent applications for hunting licenses that are submitted by that person. The department of justice may not impose fees for firearms-restrictions record searches conducted as a result of this requirement.

In license year 2000, 2.9 million gun hunting approvals were purchased by nearly 1.2 million people. If passed, this proposal would require the DNR's licensing system to interface with a database that could be relied up on to accurately identify all persons who cannot legally possess a firearm, including non-residents. This would require DOJ to maintain a database of Wisconsin residents and to also interface with similar data collected by every other state.

DNR would need to create several new license types to recognize that a bow would be the only legal weapon for some hunters. Bow-only options would need to be added for fourteen license types.

Fiscal Estimate:

Costs to modify the DNR license system are as follows:

- One-time: $5,000 to program the ALIS system to handle gun hunting license revocations.
- One-time: $10,000-$20,000 to modify fourteen license types.
- Ongoing: $5,000-$10,000 for computer processing, postage and supplies to modify ALIS records and notify license holders of revocation.
