That would be fine, providing it gives DOT sufficient lead time after the budget passes. I don't know how much lead time is actually needed. Another option would be to require that the installation be performed within 5 or 6 months of passage of the budget.

In accordance with the redrafting instructions, the attached draft modifies LRBb1295/1 by requiring the department of transportation (DOT) to install the traffic control signals not later than December 31, 2001. Since we do not know when the budget bill will pass, this provides an uncertain amount of time for DOT to install the traffic control signals, and could provide an insufficient amount of time if the budget bill does not pass until late 2001. Another option would be to specify the time frame as "not later than the first day of the 5th month" after passage of the budget bill, which would provide a fixed time frame for DOT of slightly more than four months and may result in an earlier installation if the budget bill passes promptly.

I guess the powers that be would like the amendment the way you drafted in here—Dec 31.

It is okay as drafted.
