Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

Bill Summary:

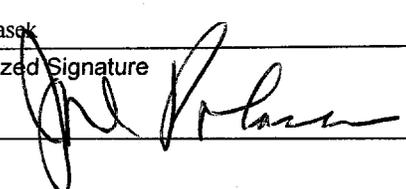

Currently the DNR is prohibited from issuing a license or approval and must revoke or suspend a license or approval if a person is delinquent in state tax payments or in court-ordered child support payments. DNR is required to collect social security numbers from applicants on behalf of the Department of Revenue (DOR) for verifying tax delinquency and on behalf of the Department of Workforce Development (DWD) for verifying child support delinquency. Tax delinquency affects only conservation occupational licenses in Chapter 29. Child support delinquency affects both conservation occupational licenses and sport licenses in Chapter 29.

This bill repeals the provision that requires an applicant for a Chapter 29 fish or game approval (either sports or occupational) to provide his or her social security number and the provision that requires DNR to deny or suspend an application or revoke or suspend an approval if a person fails to provide his or her number. It does not repeal the prohibition against issuing licenses or approvals to persons who are delinquent in taxes or child support payments. It also does not prohibit the Department from using social security numbers collected from persons prior to the effective date of the proposed legislation.

The impact of the proposed legislation would increase in the long-term. Since it affects only new applicants for approvals, the initial impact would be relatively small. Over time, a growing portion of our customer databases would have no social security number on file. For all persons without a social security number on file, the Department would have to find some other means to verify identity in order to determine which persons are delinquent in required payments. The Department would have to work with DOR and DWD to determine what other information could be used to reliably match information. Errors in customer identification are likely to increase, especially over time as new customers come into the system.

Long-Range Fiscal Implications

The long-range fiscal impact would depend on the number of errors in customer identification and the types of workload and procedural problems created for DWD and DOR. DNR would incur additional costs if it were required to make additional data system modifications.

The primary problem is that this bill would violate federal law. The federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 amended the Social Security Act and federal privacy laws to require states to collect social security numbers from all applicants for recreational licenses to allow for effective enforcement of child support order.

Fiscal Estimate:

Although the ALIS system currently requires a social security number for a new buyer, it could be eliminated as a requirement. The system currently assigns a unique DNR customer number once the SSN has been provided. Eliminating the SSN requirement would likely substantially increase the potential for multiple records for the same customer in the ALIS system.

Modifications to ALIS software would be required to eliminate the social security number question from the ALIS sales scripts that appear at each terminal. Depending on the alternative means of confirming identity and its complexity, the Department could incur additional costs for systems modification. At this time, it is estimated that the one-time cost to modify the ALIS system would be $50,000.

There are no additional revenues created by this bill.
