Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, a city, village, town, or county (political subdivision) may impose an impact fee on a developer to pay for the capital costs to construct certain public facilities that are necessary to accommodate land development. The definition of “public facilities” includes highways; facilities for treating sewage, storm waters, and surface waters; facilities for pumping, storing, and distributing water; parks; playgrounds; fire protection, emergency medical, and law enforcement facilities; and libraries. Also under current law, an impact fee ordinance must require that an impact fee that is imposed and collected by a political subdivision, but not used within a reasonable time after it is collected, be refunded to the current owner of the property with regard to which the impact fee was imposed.

Under this bill, an impact fee must be used within seven years after it is collected, or the fee must be refunded to the first person who purchased the property from the developer. The bill also allows a political subdivision to extend the seven-year time period for an additional three years if the political subdivision adopts a resolution stating that, due to extenuating circumstances and hardship, it needs an additional three years to use the impact fee that has been collected.
