Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Bingo Prizes

Under current law, religious, charitable, service, fraternal, and veterans' organizations and organizations to which contributions are deductible for federal income tax purposes may operate bingo games upon obtaining a state bingo license. The maximum allowable monetary prize for any single bingo game is $250, and the maximum allowable monetary prize for a bingo occasion (a session at which a series of successive games is played) is $1,000. The prize for a bingo game must be determined and awarded on the same day the game is played. Additionally, the prize for a bingo game may not be based on the number of calls made before a player wins. This bill increases the maximum allowable prize for a single bingo game to $500, and the maximum allowable prize for a bingo occasion to $2,500. The bill also allows organizations that have a bingo license to conduct progressive jackpot bingo. In progressive jackpot bingo, the prize is carried over to a succeeding game if no player wins in a specified number of calls, and a player must cover all the squares on his or her bingo card to win. Under the bill, the specified number of calls must be at least 48 in the first game, and one additional call must be added in each succeeding game until someone wins. The starting prize must be either a specified amount that does not exceed $500 or 50 percent of the card sales for the first game. The prize for each succeeding game must be 50 percent of the card sales for the game plus the prize amount from the preceding game. If no player wins a progressive jackpot bingo game within the specified number of calls, play must continue until a player has covered all the squares on his or her card and that person must be awarded a consolation prize not to exceed $100. Once started, progressive jackpot bingo must be conducted at each bingo occasion until the progressive jackpot is awarded, except that progressive jackpot bingo may be played only once per day.

Types of bingo games

Currently, the Department of Administration (DOA) offers two types of licenses to conduct bingo: a regular license and a limited period license. An organization with a regular license may conduct “regular” bingo games. Regular bingo games must be played on reusable cards (hard cards). For an admission fee not to exceed $1, a player receives a hard card that he or she may use to play all regular bingo games conducted at a bingo occasion. For a fee not to exceed $1 per card, a person may rent extra hard cards, each good for all regular bingo games conducted at the bingo occasion. Current law does not limit the number of regular bingo occasions that a regular bingo licensee may conduct in a year.

An organization with a regular license may also conduct up to three games of “special” bingo at each regular bingo occasion. Special bingo is played on disposable (paper) cards. The maximum price for each special bingo card is 25 cents per card per game. A player must pay for a regular bingo card to play a special bingo game offered during a regular bingo occasion.

DOA issues limited period licenses for organizations to conduct bingo for up to four days a year at short-term events such as fairs, festivals, carnivals, or bazaars. An organization may not charge admission for limited period bingo, but may charge up to 50 cents per card per game. Either paper or hard cards may be used to play limited period bingo, and current law does not limit the number of games that may be played with paper cards during a limited period bingo occasion.

This bill eliminates the prohibition against playing more than three special bingo games at a regular bingo occasion and eliminates the requirement that a player must pay for a regular bingo card to play special bingo at a regular bingo occasion. The bill also provides that the maximum fee for any type of bingo is $1 per card per game.
