Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

The department anticipates in the initial year after passage this bill will generate about 20 complaints alleging non-payment of minimum wage. The department believes it can absorb this increased workload.

Passage of this bill will require the department to update its minimum wage regulations. The department believes it can update its regulations to reflect the changes in this bill at no cost.

Local government units who currently employ individuals at the minimum wage will incur increased costs when the minimum wage is increased. It is estimated about 1,000 government employees may be impacted. The positions affected range from janitors, child care workers, parking monitors, etc. While government units have a number of persons employed in these types of occupations only a small number will be directly affected by the increase since most workers are already earning more the increased rate proposed in this bill. The department lacks adequate statistical information to determine exactly how much this increase will cost any individual local unit of government.

The department incur one-time costs of about $50,000 to print minimum wage posters and publicize the bill's changes by sending a mass mailing to businesses in the state.

Long-Range Fiscal Implications
