Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Generally, under current law, a person may not practice medicine and surgery unless the person has been granted a license by the Medical Examining Board (board). Current law contains several exceptions to this licensure requirement for a person engaged in certain other professions regulated by the board or by another credentialing body, if the person holds the credential.

This bill expands the licensure requirement to apply to the performance or interpretation of needle electromyography (defined in the bill as a diagnostic medical procedure using needle electrodes inserted into a muscle to study spontaneous and voluntary electrical activity to diagnose the cause of neuromuscular disease) and the interpretation of a nerve conduction study (defined in the bill as the recording and interpretation for diagnostic purposes of electrical activity generated in the peripheral nerves by using surface electrodes and stimuli). The bill also adds exceptions to the licensure requirement for 1) the performance of a nerve conduction study by a person who is qualified by education, training, or experience to perform such a study, if the person performs the study under the direct supervision of a
