Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Current law prohibits the performance of a partial–birth abortion and defines a partial–birth abortion as one during which a person partially delivers a living fetus, causes the death of the living fetus with the intent to kill the fetus, and then completes delivery of the fetus. A person who performs a partial–birth abortion is guilty of a Class A felony, and is subject to life imprisonment. Current law allows an exception if the partial–birth abortion is performed in order to save the life of the pregnant woman and no other option is available, and current law does not permit the prosecution of the woman upon whom a partial–birth abortion is performed. Current law also grants a civil cause of action to the father or, if the pregnant woman who received the partial–birth abortion was a minor, the maternal grandparent, of a fetus aborted by a partial–birth abortion if the father or grandparent did not consent to the partial–birth abortion procedure.

After the United States Supreme Court invalidated a Nebraska statute that prohibited “partial–birth abortion,” in Stenberg v. Carhart, 530 U.S. 914 (2000), the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals held that the current Wisconsin law prohibiting partial–birth abortion had the same constitutional flaws as the Nebraska statute and enjoined its enforcement. Planned Parenthood of Wisconsin et al. v. Doyle, et al., 249 F.3d 603 (7th Cir. 2001).

In 2007, the United States Supreme Court upheld a federal ban on partial-birth abortion, finding that the federal ban did not unduly burden a woman's right to an abortion and that the federal statute set forth specific “landmarks” that clearly delineate when a partial-birth abortion is being performed. Gonzales v. Carhart, ____ U.S. ____ (2007).

This bill changes the current prohibition on the performance of a partial-birth abortion to define “partial-birth abortion” as an abortion during which a person vaginally delivers a living fetus until a certain proportion of the fetal body is outside of his or her mother’s body and then kills the partially delivered fetus. This definition is the same as that under the federal ban, as upheld by Gonzales.

The bill grants a physician who is prosecuted for performing a partial-birth abortion the right to a hearing before the medical examining board to determine if the partial-birth abortion was necessary to save the life of the mother.

The bill also specifies that a civil cause of action is granted to the father of a fetus aborted by a partial-birth abortion is limited to cases in which the father was married to the mother at the time the abortion was performed.

Because this bill creates a new crime or revises a penalty for an existing crime, the Joint Review Committee on Criminal Penalties may be requested to prepare a report concerning the proposed penalty and the costs or savings that are likely to result if the bill is enacted.
