Description

Prohibiting discrimination against an employee who declines to attend an employer-sponsored meeting or to participate in any communication with the employer or with an agent, representative, or designee of the employer, the primary purpose of which is to communicate the opinion of the employer about religious or political matters

Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

Under current law, no employer may engage in any act of employment discrimination against any individual on the basis of age, race, creed, color, disability, marital status, sex, national origin, ancestry, arrest record, conviction record, military service, or use or nonuse of lawful products off the employer's premises during nonworking hours. 2009 Assembly Bill 831 would also prohibit an employer from engaging in any act of employment discrimination against any individual on the basis of declining to attend a meeting or to participate in any communication about religious matters or political matters.

The Department of Justice has a Civil Litigation Unit in its Division of Legal Services. Among other things, the Civil Litigation Unit represents state agencies and the University of Wisconsin in a variety of employment law matters. This unit provides the legal defense to the state when it is sued as an employer under state or federal law.

If AB 831 becomes law, the Department of Justice will defend the state when it is sued as an employer for discrimination violations relating to attending a meeting or participating in any communication about religious matters or political matters. While the annual number of such suits is difficult to predict, DOJ estimates that the number of such suits will be small and that the Civil Litigation Unit will be able to absorb the increased workload. However, if the number of suits is larger than anticipated, DOJ will require additional resources to handle the increased workload.
