Gordon,

Dick Sweet told Pat if we put it in the public accomodations section of the statute it would make DWD responsible for the penalty. Since Rep. Strachota doesn't want to do that I think just amending it like North Dakota and saying mother and child is probably the easiest route to go.

Sara:

You might find the attached page from the NCSL website, which summarizes the laws of the 50 states on breastfeeding, useful. About half of the states specifically address the issue of breastfeeding in the workplace by requiring employers to provide unpaid break time, and to make a reasonable effort to provide a private place, other than a toilet stall, for employees to breastfeed.

North Dakota takes the approach that we were talking about, i.e., permitting breastfeeding where the mother and child are authorized to be.

If any of the approaches taken by any of the other states interests you, please advise and I can draft something along those lines.
