Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Engrossment information:

The text of Engrossed 2011 Senate Bill 104, as passed by the senate on February 14, 2011, consists of the following documents adopted in the senate on February 14, 2011: the bill as affected by Senate Amendment 3 (as affected by Senate Amendment 1 thereto); and Senate Amendment 4.

Content of Engrossed 2011 Senate Bill 104:

Under current law, an individual who is, or who acts on behalf of, a victim of abuse, harassment, or threats may obtain a temporary restraining order against the person who has committed the acts of abuse, harassment, or making a threat. The restraining order bars the person from contacting the victim and requires the person to stay away from the victim's residence and other places temporarily occupied by the victim until a court conducts a hearing to determine whether the restraining order should be incorporated into a longer lasting injunction.

If the court determines that the person has engaged in, or may engage in, acts of abuse, harassment, or threats against the victim, the court may issue an injunction against the person. An injunction may stay in effect for up to four years and bars the person from contacting the victim, requires the person to stay away from the victim's residence, and may require the person to stay away from other locations temporarily occupied by the victim.

A person who violates a restraining order or an injunction may be fined up to $1,000 and imprisoned for up to nine months, except that a person who violates a restraining order or injunction that was issued only for harassment faces the same fine but may be imprisoned for up to 90 days.

This bill allows a court to order a person who is convicted of violating certain restraining orders or an injunction to submit, for the duration of the restraining order or injunction, to global positioning system (GPS) tracking by the Department of Corrections (DOC). The bill also allows a court to order, as a condition of release to community supervision, a person who is charged with violating a restraining order or an injunction to submit to GPS tracking.

The bill requires the court to consider a request for GPS tracking by a district attorney or by the individual who asked for the restraining order. The bill requires the court to find, before ordering GPS tracking, that the person who violated the restraining order or injunction is more likely than not to cause serious bodily harm to the person who petitioned for the restraining order or injunction (petitioner). The bill allows the court to request DOC or a local domestic violence prevention or treatment center to provide an assessment of risk in order to determine whether the person is likely to cause serious bodily harm to the petitioner.

Under the bill, DOC must monitor the person's whereabouts with a GPS device and, if the person enters into an area that he or she is required to avoid under the terms of the restraining order or injunction, DOC must immediately notify local law enforcement and the victim. The bill requires DOC to consider input from the petitioner and develop a personalized exclusion zone into which the person may not enter in order to protect the petitioner. If the person enters the exclusion zone, the bill requires DOC to immediately notify local law enforcement and the petitioner.

The bill increases the fine for violating a domestic abuse or harassment restraining order or injunction from $1,000 to $10,000 and requires, if a person who commits a violation is placed on probation, a minimum period of probation of six months.

Under the bill, a person who violates a restraining order is required to pay a $200 surcharge in addition to his or her fine that will be used toward the costs of GPS tracking. Under the bill, the court may order the person to pay for the costs of GPS tracking. The bill makes it a Class I felony, punishable by a fine up to $10,000, imprisonment for up to three years and six months, or both, for a person to tamper with the GPS device.
