Description Employment discrimination based on employment status

Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

Current law prohibits employment discrimination based on race, creed, color, disability, age, marital status, sex, national origin, ancestry, sexual orientation, arrest or conviction record, military service, use or nonuse of products off an employer's premises outside of work hours, and the failure to attend or participate in political or religious matters. Current law defines an act of employment discrimination as a refusal to hire or employ an individual because of the previously stated bases or the act of printing or circulating of any statement, advertisement, or publication, use of any form of an employment application, or the act of making an inquiry relating to prospective employment which implies or expresses discrimination based on these protected classes.

Assembly Bill 261 would prohibit discrimination based on employment status, defined as the status of being employed or unemployed. Employment discrimination due to employment status would occur when an employer, employment agency, or other person refuses to hire or employ an individual because they are unemployed; those entities print, circulate, or cause to be printed or circulated statements, advertisements, publications, that explicitly state or suggest a job qualification that includes being presently employed or that the agency will not consider or review applications unless an individual is employed.

Administratively, this legislation would create 300 complaints annually that cannot be absorbed at current staffing levels. To meet this increased workload, two Equal Rights Officers and one attorney would need to be hired at an added annual cost of $230,000. Additional one-time costs of $2,000 are needed to update and reprint existing documentation relating to discrimination law.
