Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

Current law states employers employing at least 50 individuals on a permanent basis must permit employees meeting a certain threshold to take up to eight weeks of family leave and two weeks of medical leave in a year. Family leave can be taken for the birth or adoptive placement of a child, or to care for a child, spouse, domestic partner, or parent with a serious health condition. Medical leave can be taken when employees have a significant health condition that causes an employee to be unable to perform their duties of employment. Under each leave type, employees are not entitled to receive wages or salary, but can substitute other types of paid leave provided by the employer. In each case, employees must make reasonable efforts to schedule procedures around their existing schedules, and alert employers, when possible, prior to taking the leave.

Under current law, employees who believe their employer violated family and medical leave law may file a complaint with the Department of Workforce Development (DWD). If DWD finds employers have violated the law, DWD can order employers to take action to remedy a violation. This may include providing the requested leave, reinstating an employee, providing back pay, and reasonable actual attorney's fees. The employee, as well as DWD, can also bring actions against an employer in circuit court to recover damages.

Assembly Bill 752 allows employees to take up to six weeks of leave in a year for the purpose of serving as a donor of an organ or bone marrow if written verification is provided to the employer. Under AB 752, employees may take leave for the period necessary to undergo the procedure and recover. This leave would be subject to existing family and medical leave requirements that include requiring employers to place employees in the same or equivalent positions upon returning from leave; the leave being unpaid; existing procedures for administrative proceedings and civil actions for violations; as well as those stated above. Finally, current law allows state civil service system employees to take this leave for bone marrow or organ donation already. AB 752 would not apply to those employees.

It is projected that this bill would have no significant ongoing fiscal effect on the Wisconsin Department of Workforce Development. DWD could absorb complaints arising from the changes without hiring added Equal Rights officers to investigate them. A one-time cost of $5,000 is needed to reprint existing discrimination documentation.
