Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau
This bill is explained in the Notes provided by the Joint Legislative Council in the bill.

The people of the state of Wisconsin, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

Joint Legislative Council prefatory note: This bill was prepared for the Joint Legislative Council’s Study Committee on Problem-Solving Courts, Alternatives, and Diversions.

Treatment Alternatives and Diversions
Under current law, the Department of Justice (DOJ) provides grants to counties that have established qualifying treatment alternatives and diversion (TAD) projects for persons who are or may be charged with, or who are convicted of, offenses related to the person’s use or abuse of alcohol or other drugs. TAD projects are intended to offer alternatives to prosecution or incarceration for offenders with substance abuse problems in order to reduce recidivism, promote public safety, and reduce prison and jail populations.

In order to qualify for a TAD grant, a county’s project must meet certain criteria, including offering treatment alternatives for the offender’s substance abuse, and coordinating with other specialists, including mental health treatment providers, social services providers, and case workers in order to provide intensive case management. Each qualifying project must be developed in collaboration with representatives from the judicial system, law enforcement and corrections, social and welfare service providers, and mental health and substance abuse treatment providers. Further, each county that receives a TAD grant creates an oversight committee with representatives from those agencies or services to administer and evaluate the project.

A qualifying TAD project is subject to state audits and each county that receives a TAD grant must submit an annual report to DOJ and to the oversight committee that details its progress in promoting public safety, reducing recidivism and lowering costs, and meeting the treatment and other needs of program participants.

Current law allows counties to administer a project jointly and requires any county that receives a grant to provide matching funds that are equal to 25 percent of the amount of the grant. Eligible projects must require participants to pay a reasonable amount for their treatment within the project. Finally, under current law, the governor has created by executive order a criminal justice coordinating council (CJCC), that is charged with various duties regarding criminal justice policy and administration.

The bill creates a CJCC in DOJ, consisting of nine members who are members by virtue of the office they hold and 11 members appointed by the governor for three-year terms.
Because the CJCC has assumed the duties of the current council on offender re-entry with the department of corrections, the bill repeals references to the council.

Under the bill, in addition to studying, and providing advice and making recommendations to the governor on a variety of matters relating to the criminal justice system, CJCC advises DOJ in its administration of the TAD program.

This bill makes several changes to the TAD grant program. Under the bill, counties and tribes may qualify for TAD grants; the bill allows a county or tribe to administer a program jointly with another county or tribe. Under the bill, in order to be eligible for a TAD grant, a project must operate within the continuum from arrest to discharge from supervision and provide an alternative to prosecution, incarceration, or both. Under the bill, a project need not focus solely on alcohol and other drug treatment, but must be evidence-based and designed to promote effective criminal justice policies to reduce prosecution and incarceration costs, reduce recidivism, and enhance justice and public safety.

The bill requires each project to be designed to integrate and coordinate services from several providers, including a participant's behavioral health treatment providers, case managers, and compliance monitors. The bill requires each project to use evidence-based eligibility criteria to determine who may participate in the project and to tailor its services to the needs of each participant or target population.

The bill allows, but does not require, an eligible project to require participants to pay an amount towards their treatment. The bill eliminates the 25 percent matching funds requirement.

Under the bill, DOJ must consult with CJCC to establish eligibility criteria and to determine which county or tribe projects meet the eligibility requirements. The bill requires each county or tribe to establish a criminal justice oversight committee to develop and implement the project design and advise the county or tribe in administering and evaluating its project.

Under the bill, a project must specify whether or not certain violent offenders will be allowed to participate. If so, there must be a victim advocate on the project's oversight committee, if such an advocate exists in the project's county. If the project includes domestic abuse offenders, the oversight committee must consult with a batterers' treatment provider.

Under the bill, each county or tribe that receives a grant must, monthly, submit data requested by DOJ in order to allow DOJ to evaluate the project. The bill requires DOJ to use this data to prepare an annual progress report that it submits to the TAD council and makes available to the public. The bill requires DOJ to prepare, for submission to CJCC and to each house of the legislature, a comprehensive report every five years that includes a cost benefit analysis of the TAD grant program. The evaluation is funded from TAD appropriation, and the DOJ may enter into a contract with an independent entity to conduct the evaluation.

The bill increases an appropriation to the supreme court to fund a statewide treatment court coordinator in the office of the director of state courts.

Home Detention for Probation

Current law provides that if a person is convicted of an offense, for which there is a mandatory or presumptive minimum period of one year or less of imprisonment, a court may place the person on probation if the court requires that the person be confined for at least that mandatory or presumptive minimum period as a condition of the probation. The person is eligible to earn good time credit calculated regarding the period of confinement. In State v. Eastman, 220 Wis. 2d 330, 339, (Ct. App. 1998), the court of appeals clarified that a court’s authority did not include the ability to order home detention as a condition of probation if a person is convicted of an offense that provides a mandatory or presumptive minimum period of one year or less of imprisonment.

Current law also authorizes a county sheriff, or a house of correction superintendent, to place in the home detention program any person confined in jail who has been arrested for, charged with, convicted of, or sentenced for a crime.

The bill provides express authority for a court to order that a probationer, including a probationer who is convicted of an offense that provides a mandatory or presumptive minimum period of one year or less of imprisonment, be confined in jail or placed in detention at the probationer’s place of residence or other place designated by the court, or both, as a condition of probation during such period of the term of probation as the court prescribes, but not to exceed one year. The detention must be monitored by the use of an electronic device worn continuously on the probationer’s person and be capable of providing positive identification of the wearer at the detention location at any time. A probationer in detention is eligible for good time credit. The defendant must agree to the condition of probation; must be given the terms of the condition of probation in writing; and may be required to pay a daily fee to cover the costs associated with home detention monitoring.
