Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau
This bill makes a number of changes that affect first class city (presently only Milwaukee) police and fire departments, and the board of fire and police commissioners. The bill makes some similar changes that affect other cities, villages, and towns, a change related to the standard of proof in disciplinary procedures that affects both a first class city and other cities, villages, and certain towns, and a change that applies to the makeup of boards of police and fire commissioners. Currently, not more than three members of a first class city seven-person board, or four members of a first class city nine-person board, may be members of the same political party. Under the bill, members who are affiliated with a political party must be selected by the mayor from lists submitted by the chief officer of each of the two major political parties. Under the bill, the board of a first class city must have at least one member with professional law enforcement experience and at least one member with professional fire fighting experience. With regard to other cities, villages, and certain towns, the bill requires their boards to have at least one member who has either professional law enforcement experience or professional fire fighting experience. The law enforcement and fire fighter members are selected by a first class city mayor from a list of names submitted by the respective associations of members of the police department and fire department. Political party affiliation requirements do not apply to the law enforcement and fire fighter members of the board, but such members are generally restricted from making financial contributions to political candidates within three years of their appointment.
SENATE BILL 512

The bill also specifies that when a three-member panel of a first class city board conducts a trial to evaluate a complaint filed against a member of either department, at least one member of the panel must have professional law enforcement experience if the accused is a police officer, and one such member must have professional fire fighting experience if the accused is a fire fighter.

The bill authorizes such a board to adopt rules to allow the use of a hearing examiner, who must be agreed to by the parties, to assist the board with disciplinary hearings and appeals. In addition, the bill removes the executive secretary of the board from the mayor’s cabinet.

The bill creates the office of independent monitor. This person acts as the principal staff of a first class city board, reviews certain situations or investigations involving the police or fire department, evaluates police and fire department policies and practices, and issues periodic reports to the public relating to the status and outcome of complaints that have been filed. The independent monitor is appointed by the mayor and confirmed by the common council and serves a four-year term, although he or she serves at the pleasure of the board and may not be removed by the mayor or common council.

When a first class city board appoints a chief of either department, the bill requires the board to meet in closed session with representatives of the employee association whose members will serve under the proposed chief. Currently, if a first class city board discharges, suspends, or reduces in rank an officer or member of either department, the individual so disciplined may appeal that decision to a circuit court. Under the bill, an individual who is so disciplined may choose to appeal the board’s decision either to a circuit court or to an arbitrator who is selected jointly by the parties. An individual who is disciplined and appeals to an arbitrator may appeal the arbitrator’s decision to a circuit court. Currently, when the board issues a decision in a disciplinary hearing, it uses a just cause standard which consists of several elements. One of the elements requires the board to determine whether the chief of the police or fire department discovered substantial evidence that the subordinate violated the rule or order as described in the charges against the subordinate. The bill changes the standard from substantial evidence to clear and convincing evidence. This change, from substantial evidence to clear and convincing evidence, also applies to other cities, villages, and certain towns.

The bill also creates a scope of review under which a court or arbitrator is to review an appeal of a first class city board's discipline of an officer or member of either department. Under the bill, a court or arbitrator must review the evidence independently and without deference to the board’s findings; must reverse the board’s decision if it finds that fairness or correctness of the action has been impaired by material or procedural errors; and must set aside or modify the board's decision if it finds that the board erroneously interpreted a provision of law, or may remand the case to the board for further action that is consistent with current law.

The bill also requires the court or arbitrator to reverse the board's decision if it finds that the board’s exercise of discretion is outside of its delegated powers; is inconsistent with a board rule, policy, or practice, unless the board’s deviation is adequately explained; or violates the constitution or the statutes. The bill also authorizes a court or arbitrator to take additional testimony, depositions, and interrogatories, and to grant requests for additional discovery.

The bill also requires that a first class city's city service commission, and a first class city fire and police commission, have a rule that requires the city to give the same number of veterans preference points, with regard to competitive examinations, to applicants who apply for a job, as they gave before March 1, 2017. A first class city fire and police commission is also required to adopt a similar rule. For further information see the state and local fiscal estimate, which will be printed as an appendix to this bill.

The people of the state of Wisconsin, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:
