Description Duty to participate in an appeal of an order terminating parental rights

Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

The bill, as amended, allows a person representing the interests of the public or opposing counsel to file a motion for abandonments when the person who files notice of intent to appeal a TPR order fails to file a notice of abandonment with the time period specified by s. 809.105(5).

The state court system will be responsible for creating and/or updating any court forms, procedures, and reference materials. It is anticipated that any cost associated with these updated can be absorbed as a part of the normal course of work.

It is unclear to what degree the court's workload (judges, court reporters, and clerks) would increase at the local level. While it is anticipated that these motions would occur infrequently in the majority of the counties and any impact is likely to be minimal, counties that handle a high volume of TPR cases may require additional court and staff resources. In addition, it is unclear, as written, whether the "court" noted in the bill would include the Court of Appeals. If it includes the Court of Appeals, additional resources will be needed to accommodate the appellant's right to a hearing.

Long-Range Fiscal Implications

Indeterminate.
