Description certification requirements for building contractors

Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

This bill makes changes related to certificates of financial responsibility issued by the Department of Safety and Professional Services (DSPS) that current law generally requires a person to hold to obtain a building permit.

Current rules promulgated by DSPS require a person to complete 12 hours in an approved educational course to obtain a certificate of financial responsibility. The bill requires that a person complete an educational course that consists of in-person or live virtual instruction to obtain a certificate of financial responsibility. This course must include instruction on accounting, lien law, ethics, and best business practices. The applicant must show photo identification to register attendance for the course. In addition, the bill requires a person to complete a total of at least four hours of continuing education on construction laws and codes, and contracts, liability, and risk management every two years to maintain a certificate of financial responsibility. Under the bill, these hours count towards the 12 hours of continuing education that current law requires a certificate holder to complete every two years. In addition, the bill requires providers of continuing education courses for financial responsibility certificates to submit to DSPS test questions related to their courses and verification that attendees completed their courses.

The Department estimates that it will incur one-time costs totaling $5,930 for staff salary, fringe and overhead to review, update and communicate rules, modify forms and websites, and establish procedures for review to determine if education providers' courses are compliance with the requirements of the bill. These one-time costs may be possible to absorb within DSPS's budget.
