Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, in an action affecting the family, such as a divorce or a paternity action, a court must determine the legal custody of a child based on the best interest of the child. Although the court may grant sole legal custody to one parent or joint legal custody to both parents, the court must presume that joint legal custody is in the child's best interest. The court may grant sole legal custody only if both parents agree to sole legal custody with the same parent or if at least one parent requests sole legal custody and the court finds that: 1) one parent is not capable of performing parental duties or does not wish to have an active role in raising the child; 2) one or more conditions exist that would substantially interfere with the exercise of joint legal custody; or 3) the parties will not be able to cooperate in future decision making. Evidence of child or spousal abuse creates a rebuttable presumption that the parties will not be able to cooperate in future decision making. Current law requires the court to allocate periods of physical placement between the parties if the court orders sole or joint legal custody. The court may deny periods of physical placement with a parent only if the court finds that the physical placement would endanger the child's physical, mental, or emotional health. The statutes list a number of factors that the court must consider in awarding both legal custody and periods of physical placement. Among those factors is whether there is evidence of child or spousal abuse.

This substitute amendment provides that, if a court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that a parent has engaged in a pattern or serious incident of spousal abuse, there is a rebuttable presumption that it is detrimental to the child and contrary to the child's best interest for that parent to have either sole or joint legal custody of the child. This presumption takes precedence over the other rules regarding the determination of legal custody, such as the presumption that joint legal custody is in the child's best interest, and may be rebutted only by a preponderance of evidence that: 1) the abusive party has completed treatment for batterers provided through a certified treatment program or by a certified treatment provider and is not abusing alcohol or any other drug, and 2) it is in the best interest of the child that the abusive party be given joint or sole legal custody based on the statutory factors that the court must consider in awarding custody and physical placement. If the court finds that a party has engaged in a pattern or serious incident of spousal abuse, the court must state in writing in the custody order whether the presumption against awarding custody to the abusive party was rebutted and, if so, what evidence rebutted the presumption and why its findings related to legal custody and physical placement are in the best interest of the child.

The substitute amendment provides that, if the court finds that both parties have engaged in a pattern or serious incident of spousal abuse, for purposes of the presumption the court must attempt to determine which party was the primary physical aggressor. In order to do that, the court must consider a number of specified factors, such as prior acts of domestic violence between the parties, the relative severity of injuries, if any, whether one of the parties acted in self-defense, and whether there has been a pattern of coercive and abusive behavior. If one, but not both, of the parties was convicted of a crime that was an act of domestic abuse, the court must find the party who was convicted to be the primary physical aggressor. If the court determines that neither party was the primary physical aggressor, the presumption against sole or joint legal custody does not apply.

The substitute amendment provides that, if the court grants periods of physical placement to a parent who the court finds has engaged in a pattern or serious incident of spousal abuse, the court must provide for the safety and well-being of the child and for the safety of the other party. The substitute amendment specifies a number of actions that the court must consider, and one or more of which the court must impose, for ensuring the safety of the child and the other party, such as requiring supervised periods of physical placement for the abusive parent, requiring the exchange of the child in a protected setting or in the presence of an appropriate third party who agrees to assume that responsibility, requiring the abusive parent to attend and complete treatment for batterers as a condition of exercising his or her physical placement, and prohibiting an abusive parent with an alcohol or drug abuse problem from consuming alcohol during his or her periods of physical placement and from being under the influence of alcohol or another drug when the parties exchange the child for periods of physical placement.

Under current law, a guardian ad litem (GAL) in an action affecting the family must be an attorney and must have completed three hours of approved continuing legal education relating to a GAL's functions. The substitute amendment requires the continuing legal education to include training on the dynamics of domestic violence and its effects on victims of domestic violence and on children. The substitute amendment requires a GAL in an action affecting the family to investigate whether there is evidence of interspousal battery or domestic abuse and to report to the court on the results of the investigation.

Under current law, unless the court waives the requirement, at least one session of mediation is required in an action affecting the family if legal custody or physical placement is contested. The substitute amendment requires the court or circuit court commissioner to inform the parties that the court may waive the mediation requirement if the court determines that attending a session will cause undue hardship or endanger the health or safety of one of the parties and the bases on which the court may make its determination, including evidence of interspousal battery or domestic abuse. Under current law, a mediator may terminate mediation if there is evidence that a party has engaged in interspousal battery or domestic violence. The substitute amendment requires every mediator to have training on the dynamics of domestic violence and its effects on victims of domestic violence and on children; requires the first mediation session, which is a screening and evaluation session, to include screening for domestic abuse; and requires any intake form that the parties are required to complete before the start of mediation to ask each party whether either party has engaged in domestic abuse.

Under current law, one of the factors that a court must consider when awarding legal custody and physical placement is the mental and physical health of the persons living in a proposed custodial household. The substitute amendment modifies this factor by requiring the court to consider whether the mental and physical health of the persons living in a proposed custodial household negatively affects the child's intellectual, physical, or emotional well-being. The substitute amendment also provides that, if the court finds that a parent has engaged in interspousal battery or domestic violence, the child's safety and well-being and the safety of the other parent are the paramount concerns when the court is awarding legal custody and physical placement.

The people of the state of Wisconsin, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

24 incident of interspousal battery, as described under s. 940.19 or 940.20 (1m), or
25 domestic abuse, as defined in s. 813.12 (1) (am), pars. (am), (b), and (c) do not apply

1 and there is a rebuttable presumption that it is detrimental to the child and contrary
2 to the best interest of the child to award joint or sole legal custody to that party. The 3 presumption under this subdivision may be rebutted only by a preponderance of 4 evidence of all of the following:

5 a. The party who committed the battery or abuse has successfully completed
6 treatment for batterers provided through a certified treatment program or by a
7 certified treatment provider and is not abusing alcohol or any other drug.

17 consider all of the following:

18 a. Prior acts of domestic violence between the parties.

19 b. The relative severity of the injuries, if any, inflicted upon a party by the other
20 party in any of the prior acts of domestic violence under subd. 2. a.

21 c. The likelihood of future injury to either of the parties resulting from acts of 22 domestic violence.

23 d. Whether either of the parties acted in self-defense in any of the prior acts

4 this subdivision.

5 3. If the court must determine under subd. 2. which party was the primary
6 physical aggressor and one, but not both, of the parties has been convicted of a crime
7 that was an act of domestic abuse, as defined in s. 813.12 (1) (am), with respect to the 8 other party, the court shall find the party who was convicted of the crime to be the 9 primary physical aggressor.

10 4. The presumption under subd. 1. does not apply if the court finds that both 11 parties engaged in a pattern or serious incident of interspousal battery or domestic 12 abuse but the court determines that neither party was the primary physical 13 aggressor.

14 SECTION 21. 767.24 (4) (a) 2. of the statutes is amended to read:

16 the court shall consider each case on the basis of the factors in sub. (5) (am), subject
17 to sub. (5) (bm). The court shall set a placement schedule that allows the child to have 18 regularly occurring, meaningful periods of physical placement with each parent and 19 that maximizes the amount of time the child may spend with each parent, taking into 20 account geographic separation and accommodations for different households.

21 SECTION 22. 767.24 (5) (intro.) of the statutes is renumbered 767.24 (5) (am)
22 (intro.) and amended to read:

23 767.24 (5) (am) (intro.) ~~In~~ Subject to par. (bm), in determining legal custody and 24 periods of physical placement, the court shall consider all facts relevant to the best
25 interest of the child. The court may not prefer one parent or potential custodian over

2 Subject to par. (bm), the court shall consider the following factors in making its

8 in a pattern or serious incident of interspousal battery, as described under s. 940.19
9 or 940.20 (1m), or domestic abuse, as defined in s. 813.12 (1) (am), the safety and 10 well-being of the child and the safety of the parent who was the victim of the battery
11 or abuse shall be the paramount concerns in determining legal custody and periods
12 of physical placement.
