Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, court commissioners, with the approval of the chief judge, may issue summonses, arrest warrants or search warrants, conduct initial appearances and set bail. A full-time court commissioner, with the approval of the chief judge, may conduct the preliminary examination and arraignment in a criminal case and accept a guilty plea if both the state and the defendant agree.

Under the bill, a full-time court commissioner in any county with a population of 500,000 or more, with the approval of the chief judge, may sentence the defendant in misdemeanor cases if there is a stipulation between the state and the defendant. In addition, the court commissioner may review probation revocation hearings in misdemeanor cases. Any sentence imposed by the court commissioner is subject to review by a judge if either party requests court review within 15 days after the sentence is imposed.
