Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Generally, this bill prohibits the transfer of an individual from a hospital's emergency department for emergency detention until a hospital employee or medical staff member determines the transfer is medically appropriate. The bill also specifies the actions that satisfy the duty to warn of the dangerousness of a person, and provides immunity from civil and criminal liability for actions taken in good faith to warn of dangerousness.

Transportation to detention facility

Under current law, a law enforcement officer or certain other persons may take an individual into custody for purposes of emergency detention if the officer or other person has cause to believe that the individual is mentally ill, drug dependent, or developmentally disabled, and that the individual shows any of the following: 1) a substantial probability of physical harm to himself or herself; 2) a substantial probability of physical harm to other persons; 3) a substantial probability of physical impairment or injury to himself or herself due to impaired judgment; or 4) due to mental illness, the inability to satisfy certain basic needs. The individual may not be detained by the officer or other person and the facility for more than a total of 72 hours after the individual is taken into custody for the purposes of emergency detention. The county department of community programs must approve the need for detention and may not do so unless a psychiatrist, psychologist, or other mental health professional has performed a crisis assessment on the individual and agrees with the need for detention and the county department believes the individual will not voluntarily consent to evaluation, diagnosis, and treatment. Under the bill, if an individual is in a hospital's emergency department, the law enforcement officer or other person may not transport the individual for detention until a hospital employee or medical staff member who is treating the individual determines that the transfer of the individual to the detention facility is medically appropriate.

ASSEMBLY BILL 538

Duty to warn

The bill specifies that a health care provider fulfills any duty to warn by taking any of the following actions: contacting law enforcement or the relevant county department and disclosing knowledge of potential evidence of the individual's substantial probability of harm, approving the emergency detention of the individual if the health care provider is in the position to do so, and taking any other action that a reasonable health care provider would consider as fulfilling the duty to warn a third party of substantial probability of harm. The bill explicitly allows any health care provider and any law enforcement officer to disclose information that an individual poses a substantial probability of serious bodily harm to another person in a good faith effort to prevent or lessen a serious and imminent threat to the health or safety of a person or the public. Under the bill, any person who discloses information evidencing substantial probability of serious bodily harm or a health care provider who takes one of the actions that fulfill a duty to warn is not civilly or criminally liable for actions taken in good faith. The bill explicitly exempts from the state's requirements for confidentiality of patient health information the good faith disclosure of protected patient health information made in an effort to prevent or lessen a serious and imminent threat to the health and safety of a person or the public.

3 the person or others requires that conditional release be revoked. If the court
4 determines after hearing that any rule or condition of release has been violated, or 5 that the safety of the person or others requires that conditional release be revoked,
6 it may revoke the order for conditional release and order that the released person be 7 placed in an appropriate institution under s. 51.37 (3) until the expiration of the 8 commitment or until again conditionally released under this section.
