Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, at 10 a.m. on the first Tuesday in October of each year in which there is a presidential election, the following members of a political party must convene in the state capitol to nominate the party's presidential electors: candidates for state senate or assembly, state officers, and holdover state senators. A vote for a party's candidates for president and vice president in the presidential election is a vote for the party's presidential electors so nominated. After the election, the presidential electors of the winning candidates for president and vice president then convene and transmit their votes for president and vice president to Congress.

Under this bill, if, in a presidential election year, a political party does not have a candidate for state senate or assembly, state officer, or holdover state senator, in lieu of a convention described above, no later than 10 a.m. on the first Tuesday in October preceding the presidential election, the chairperson of the state committee of the political party must nominate the party's presidential electors.

The people of the state of Wisconsin, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:
