Wisconsin's biennial state budget bill is easily the most significant piece of legislation that is enacted during the entire legislative session. This is the case for two reasons. First, the biennial budget bill appropriates almost all dollars that will be expended by state government during the two fiscal years covered by the bill. These dollars consist mostly of state taxes and revenues, program and license fees, and federal moneys allocated to Wisconsin. In 2019 Wisconsin Act 9, the state budget act for the 2019–21 fiscal biennium, the legislature authorized the expenditure of over $81 billion in total state government spending from all revenue sources. The second reason for the significance of the biennial budget bill is that it contains most of the governor's public policy agenda for the entire legislative session. The biennial budget bill is generally considered the one bill that "must pass" in order to sufficiently fund state government operations and programs during the fiscal years covered in the bill. As such, there is a strong incentive for the governor, as well as for legislators, to include in the biennial budget bill the major public policy items supported by the governor and the legislators. The state budget process is therefore unequalled in its significance for the operations of state government and for its effects on the people of Wisconsin.

The provision for a biennial executive budget bill was created by 1929 Chapter 97, and it has applied to all legislative sessions since 1931. Prior to that time, the governor was not responsible for submitting an executive budget bill to the legislature; individual bills were introduced for each department. Early biennial budget bills focused on general agency appropriations and the revenue measures necessary to provide for them. Major policy changes were introduced separately. However, over the years, budget bills have evolved into major policy documents and, since the advent of program budgeting in the early 1960s, governors have usually submitted single omnibus budget bills that contain both program and fiscal proposals.

This publication discusses a few significant features of Wisconsin's biennial budget before summarizing the actual steps in the budget-making process. Next, this publication describes the procedures for budget adjustment and review. Finally, the publication includes a table outlining budget legislation considered and passed by the legislature from 1931 to the present.

Core principles of the state budget process

There are four core principles to the state budget process in Wisconsin. First, the state budget is a biennial budget, covering two fiscal years of state government operations and programs, with each fiscal year beginning on July 1 and ending on June 30. Many states have a "drop-dead" date by which a new state budget must be enacted in order for state government to continue to operate. Wisconsin does not have such a deadline. In Wisconsin, if a new state budget is not enacted by June 30 of the odd-numbered year, state government continues to operate and its programs are funded, but only at the prior year's appropriation amounts. The governor and the legislature strive to enact the state budget bill before July 1 of the odd-numbered year, but there is little short-term fiscal impact if that deadline is not met.

Second, Wisconsin uses what is known as program budgeting, in which executive branch state agencies are assigned to different functional areas and generally lump-sum appropriations are made to the agencies to fund the programs. The biennial budget bill therefore lists the overall amounts appropriated for agency operations and programs, but does not contain the level of expenditure detail that one might find in a state that uses a "line-item" budget, in which each agency expenditure is specifically budgeted by line in the bill. This level of detail is not found in the biennial budget bill in Wisconsin; instead, it appears in accompanying budget documents, which are not law but which do capture the intentions of the governor and the legislature in budget deliberations. Consequently, that portion of the biennial bill that sets the expenditure levels of state operations and programs is roughly 200 pages in length, which is typically about 15 to 20 percent of the total number of pages of recent biennial budget bills.

Third, the Wisconsin Constitution requires that the legislature "provide for an annual tax sufficient to defray the estimated expenses of the state for each year."¹ What this means in practice is that Wisconsin has a balanced-budget requirement, in which state expenditures must equal revenues received by the state. Generally speaking, at each stage of the budget process, in which different versions of the budget are formulated and considered, each version of the budget must be balanced by having proposed state expenditures in any fiscal year be less than or equal to anticipated state revenues. This is a real constraint on state budgeting, one that is not found at the federal level.

Finally, the Wisconsin Constitution grants the governor partial veto power over appropriation bills. This partial veto power allows the governor to reduce amounts appropriated to state agencies for their operations and programs by writing in a lower amount, and allows the governor, with limitations, to veto specific words and digits within newly created statutory text in appropriation bills. The governor can thus significantly alter the legislature's budget actions. While this power has been curtailed in recent years by amendments to the constitution, the governor still can reduce all state expenditures, or the expenditures of any specific state agency, with the stroke of a pen, subject only to an override of his or her actions by a two-thirds vote of each house of the legislature—an event that last occurred in 1985.

Biennial budget process

The usual budget process encompasses four main steps in which budget proposals are 1) developed by the governor with input from state agencies; 2) submitted to the legislature in bill form; 3) acted upon by the legislature; and 4) signed or vetoed, in whole or part, by the governor. In practice, the process involves complex maneuvers that generate significant debate and negotiation.²

Budget development. Agencies formally begin action on their biennial budget requests in June of the even-numbered year after receiving instructions from the State Budget Office (SBO) in the Department of Administration. Those agencies that have complex budgets or are planning major program changes will begin drafting their requests even earlier. These drafts are usually prepared by attorneys at the Legislative Reference Bureau (LRB). The budget instructions include the prescribed format for requests along with budget directives from the governor, such as limitations on or reductions of appropriation requests.

Agencies submit their requests to the SBO and the Legislative Fiscal Bureau (LFB) by September 15 of the even-numbered year. By November 20, the secretary of administration submits the requests to the governor (or governor-elect) and each member of the incoming legislature. In mid-December, the LFB publishes a summary of agency requests for distribution to the legislature.

The Department of Revenue also prepares general fund revenue estimates by the November 20 deadline. These reports cover actual and estimated revenues for each year of the biennium. In January, the LFB prepares an additional, independent estimate of general fund revenues for the legislature.

During the closing days of the even-numbered year, the governor considers the recommendations of the SBO analysts and develops a biennial budget that incorporates the desired fiscal policies and program levels for the next two years. In arriving at the final biennial budget bill, the governor may consult with many individuals, including the secretary of administration, the state budget director and SBO analysts, the secretary of revenue and revenue analysts, the heads of executive branch agencies, and legislators.

The governor's budget bill. When the governor's budget decisions are finalized, attorneys at the LRB draft the statutory changes needed to implement them, creating the governor's budget bill. The biennial budget bill is the most complex piece of legislation introduced in a session, and recent versions have run well over 1,000 pages. The 2019 budget bill was 1,148 pages.

By statute, the governor must deliver the biennial budget message to the legislature on or before the last Tuesday in January of the odd-numbered year. The Tuesday deadline was enacted in 1973 Chapter 333; previously, the date had been February 1 of odd-numbered years. If the governor so requests, the legislature may pass a joint resolution that allows later submission of the biennial budget message, the executive budget bill, and the accompanying reports. This type of extension is now very common, having been authorized in all 17 of the most recent legislative sessions covered in this publication. The latest date of introduction was March 3, 1971. On February 28, 2019, the legislature convened in extraordinary session for Governor Evers to deliver his biennial budget message.

The law also requires the Joint Committee on Finance (JCF) to introduce the executive budget bill without change in one of the houses. Transmission of the bill by the governor to the legislature must occur immediately after delivery of the budget message. The budget bill is then referred to the JCF.

The format for budget bills can vary according to the wishes of a particular governor. The practice is almost always to submit one biennial budget proposal, but Governor Tommy G. Thompson recommended separate budget bills for revenue, transportation, natural resources, and the capital budget in 1987 and for natural resources and transportation in 1989. In both sessions, the JCF combined the separate bills along with the JCF modifications into substitute amendments. In 1995, Governor Thompson submitted his recommendations for the transportation budget after the biennial budget bill was introduced. The legislature introduced and passed the transportation budget as a separate bill. Additionally, budget bills may be introduced as two identical bills (known as companion bills) in both houses of the legislature, as was the case in the 1997, 1999, 2001, 2011, 2015, 2017, and 2019 sessions.

Joint Committee on Finance. The JCF has the primary responsibility for committee consideration of budget bills. Since the 1911 session, the JCF has had the authority to receive all bills containing provisions for appropriations, revenue, and taxation. The JCF begins its consideration of the budget with initial overview briefings by the LFB, followed by public hearings on the governor's proposed budget. A hearing is then scheduled for each agency's budget proposal, and agency personnel are invited to appear. This gives the JCF members an opportunity to question each agency head about the effects of the budget proposals.

The length of each hearing depends on the size of the agency and the complexity of the proposals affecting it. In addition, the JCF may hold hearings at different locations around the state to receive testimony from the general public. Individuals and interest groups may also testify at these hearings. For the 2019 budget, the JCF held public hearings in Janesville, Oak Creek, River Falls, and Green Bay. At the close of its public hearings, which take several weeks, the JCF meets in executive session to decide what action it will recommend. Public testimony is not taken during executive sessions, but agency heads may be asked to respond to the JCF questions.

The JCF uses various procedures for breaking the budget into workable portions for discussion and action. In some cases, the JCF may use “issue discussion groups,” which are more informal than subcommittees, to study sections of the budget in greater detail. In recent sessions, with the cooperation of leadership in both houses, the JCF has removed some unrelated policy items that the governor submitted as part of the budget; the policy items are then drafted as separate bills for introduction.

Legislative action. When the JCF completes its work on the budget, its recommendations are forwarded to the legislative house in which the bill originated. Legislative leaders decide which house will first consider the budget bill. The JCF report usually takes the form of a substitute amendment, drafted by attorneys at the LRB working with the LFB. The bill is then debated, amended, passed, and forwarded to the second house where similar action is taken.

If the two houses do not agree on identical versions of the budget, one avenue for resolution is the establishment of a committee of conference, which includes representation from each house. The conference committee tries to reach an agreement on the differences between the versions passed by the Senate and the Assembly, and the conference report it produces cannot be amended in either house but must be accepted or rejected in its entirety. From the 1931 session to the 1969 session, the legislature used budget conference committees on only five occasions. Since then, the legislature has appointed conference committees more frequently, particularly when each major party controls one of the legislative houses. However, there has not been a conference committee on a biennial budget bill since 2009.

Another practice for narrowing the differences between the houses involves the use of simple amendments rather than a complete substitute amendment for the entire bill. Beginning in the 1977 session, the legislature began using omnibus amendments, known as “super amendments” or “caucus amendments,” which are composed of numerous simple amendments combined to reach agreement. These types of amendments, however, have not been used in recent legislative sessions, other than for making technical corrections in the substitute amendment or adding minor items.

Governor’s approval. When the houses have agreed to pass an identically worded budget bill, the proposal is prepared as an enrolled bill for the governor’s signature. While the governor usually accepts the majority of the enrolled bill, the governor may reject separate parts within it using the partial veto power. The legislature may override a veto with a two-thirds vote in each house, but a veto override rarely happens and has not happened since the 1985 session.³

If the legislature fails to enact a new budget by July 1 of the odd-numbered year when the previous biennial budget is due to expire, state law provides that the existing appropriations remain in effect until amended or eliminated by legislation so government can continue to operate. The earliest biennial budget adoption was the 1941–43 budget, which passed the legislature on March 13, 1941, and was published on April 18, 1941. The latest adoption was the 1971–73 budget, passed on October 27, 1971, and published on November 4, 1971.

Budget adjustments and reviews

The 1971 legislature enacted 1971 Chapter 125 to provide that, during even-numbered years, the governor could submit a budget review bill if the state’s fiscal condition required changes in expenditures and revenues. This procedure was viewed as an alternative to annual budgeting. The legislature passed budget review bills for the 1971 to 1979 sessions, but displeasure with the process in both the legislature and the governor’s office led to the repeal of the review bill mechanism in 1981 Chapter 27.

Since then, the legislature has frequently passed “budget adjustment” bills without any statutory requirement.⁴ A budget adjustment bill affects state expenditures or revenues set by the biennial budget or a previous budget adjustment. In recent years, these bills have typically been introduced at the request of the governor and contain a relating clause⁵ that includes the words “state finances.”

Similar to budget review bills, budget adjustment bills have most commonly been introduced in even-numbered years to affect a biennial budget enacted in the prior odd-numbered year. In the 2003, 2009, and 2011 sessions, however, the legislature enacted budget adjustment bills at the beginning of the sessions (in the final months of the fiscal bienniums). The 2009 and 2011 budget adjustment bills were introduced to address budget shortfalls and promote economic development in response to the 2007–09 recession and subsequent recovery. The governor has not introduced a budget adjustment bill since 2011.

Beginning with the 1971 biennium, the legislature has passed budget review or budget adjustment bills in all but six sessions, the exceptions being the 1999, 2005, 2013, 2015, 2017, and 2019 sessions. Since that time, the legislature has considered 37 bills that proposed major changes in the existing biennial budget: 10 budget review bills, 26 budget adjustment bills, and one annual budget.

Subsequent to the budget review repeal, the only statutory requirement for passage

4. Four budget adjustment acts—2011 Act 109, 2003 Act 1, 2007 Act 226, and 2009 Act 2—were introduced in accordance with Wis. Stat. § 16.50 (7). That provision requires the secretary of administration to notify the governor and the legislature if the secretary projects a revenue shortfall beyond a specified threshold. Once notified, the governor must submit recommendations to the legislature for correcting this imbalance. If the legislature is not in a floorperiod at the time of the secretary’s notification, the governor must call a special session to address the fiscal emergency. For additional details about this provision, see Christa Pugh, “State General Fund Balanced Budget Requirements,” Informational Paper 74 (Madison, WI: Legislative Fiscal Bureau, January 2019).

5. A relating clause is an essential part of a bill’s title that identifies the general subject matter of the legislation.

of a bill affecting a biennial budget occurred during the 1987 session. The legislature, at the request of Governor Thompson, included in 1987 Wisconsin Act 4 a provision for the passage of an “annual budget” in the second year of the session that would incorporate “any needed changes in appropriations or revenues.” Although the legislature did pass an annual budget in 1988, the provision was allowed to sunset in the following session.
