Whereas, since 1937, the observation of Dairy Month in June has given Wisconsinites an opportunity to recognize the special role dairy has played in the state's agricultural heritage; and

Whereas, as early as the 1840s, dairy farmers from New York, then the nation's leading dairy producer, migrated to Wisconsin and established a foothold for the dairy industry; and

Whereas, in 1872, the Wisconsin Dairyman's Association was founded with the goal of improving methods of making, selling, and marketing dairy products such as cheese and butter; and

Whereas, at the turn of the century, Wisconsin's own Stephen Babcock developed a means to test the butterfat content of milk, which revolutionized the dairy industry by enabling standards of quality that could be used to establish milk prices; and

Whereas, by the onset of World War I, Wisconsin surpassed all other states in dairy production; and

Whereas, starting in 1940, Wisconsin cemented its reputation as “America’s Dairyland” by placing this slogan on license plates; and

Whereas, today, over 1.28 million cows across nearly 6,000 dairy farms call Wisconsin home; and

Whereas, the dairy industry contributes about $45.6 billion to the state economy annually; and

Whereas, as a key part of this industry, Wisconsin cheesemakers produce over 600 kinds of cheese and together produce over a quarter of the nation’s cheese; and

Whereas, because it has touched so many Wisconsinites’ lives, past and present, the dairy industry is a central component of Wisconsin heritage and identity; and

Whereas, in the month of June, the people of Wisconsin acknowledge the contributions of the state’s hardworking dairy farmers, who have made dairy a pillar of the state’s success; and

Whereas, these dairy farmers’ unwavering dedication to the highest standards of quality have consistently moved Wisconsin forward; now, therefore, be it
