Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, fall semester classes at the University of Wisconsin (UW) may not begin until after September 1.

This bill provides that, beginning in 1996, fall semester classes at the UW may not begin until after Labor Day. The bill directs the UW board of regents to establish a procedure that enables students to register for the fall semester prior to the beginning of September.

The bill also directs technical college district boards to ensure that no technical college commences the fall semester until after Labor Day.

For further information see the state fiscal estimate, which will be printed as an appendix to this bill.
