Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, married persons may be divorced or legally separated without showing either party to be at fault for a breakdown in the marriage. For a divorce, the court must find that the marriage is irretrievably broken, which may be based on the statement of one of the parties and the court's determination that reconciliation is not reasonably likely. For a legal separation, the court must find that the marital relationship is broken. The court may convert a judgment of legal separation into a judgment of divorce if at least one year has elapsed since the judgment of legal separation was entered and at least one of the parties requests it.

This bill establishes covenant marriage as an option for a man and a woman who are entering into a marriage and for a man and a woman who are already married. If the parties to a covenant marriage, or one of them, decides to seek a divorce or a legal separation and at least one of the parties has a minor child, the court must make certain findings that do not apply in other marriages. In addition to finding that the marriage is irretrievably broken, or that the marital relationship is broken in the case of legal separation, the court must find that the parties have undergone marriage counseling, in an attempt to save the marriage, and that at least one of the following grounds applies:

- 1) The respondent has committed adultery.
- 2) The respondent has committed a felony and has been sentenced to imprisonment.
- 3) The respondent has abandoned the petitioner for at least one year.
- 4) The respondent has abused the petitioner or a child of either or both parties.
- 5) The parties have been living apart without reconciliation for two years or more.
- 6) The respondent is habitually intemperate or treats the petitioner so cruelly that living together is impossible. (This ground applies only for a legal separation.)

If neither of the parties to a covenant marriage has a minor child and the wife is not pregnant, the court may grant the parties a divorce or legal separation upon the same basis as in a marriage that is not a covenant marriage. As in other marriages, the parties to a covenant marriage may stipulate as to any issues that the court would have to decide (such as property division, child custody and child support), including the grounds on which the divorce or legal separation is based. The family court commissioner may preside at the hearing and grant a judgment of divorce or legal separation in any marriage if the parties stipulate as to all issues that must be decided.

In order to enter into a covenant marriage, the parties must execute a declaration of intent to contract a covenant marriage, which must be signed by the parties and notarized, and which must include a recitation regarding their marriage as a commitment for life and the stated commitment to obtain marriage counseling if they experience marital difficulties. In addition, the parties must receive premarital counseling from a marriage and family therapist, a professional counselor, a member of the clergy or a person designated by a member of the clergy. The person providing the counseling must sign, and have notarized, an attestation that he or she provided counseling.

When the parties apply for a marriage license, they must inform the county clerk, as part of their marriage license application, that they intend to contract a covenant marriage. The parties must submit to the county clerk a duplicate original of their declaration of intent to contract a covenant marriage, which the clerk attaches to the marriage license. Parties who indicate to the county clerk that they intend to contract a covenant marriage may marry no sooner than 31 days and no later than 45 days after their marriage license is issued. This extra time affords the parties an opportunity to rescind their decision to contract a covenant marriage. (For other marriages, the parties must marry within 30 days after their marriage license is issued.) The person officiating at the marriage of the parties designates on the marriage document, which when completed is sent to the register of deeds, whether the parties entered into a covenant marriage.

Persons who are already married may designate their marriage as a covenant marriage by executing a declaration of intent to designate an existing marriage as a covenant marriage, which must be signed by the parties and notarized, and which must include a recitation regarding their marriage as a commitment for life and the stated commitment to obtain marriage counseling if they experience marital difficulties. A duplicate original of the declaration of intent must be filed with the register of deeds in this state with whom the parties' marriage certificate is filed. If the parties were married in another state, they must file a duplicate original of the declaration of intent, along with a copy with their marriage certificate, with the register of deeds of the county in which they reside.

The bill requires the department of health and family services (DHFS) to develop by rule and prepare an informational pamphlet on covenant marriage that DHFS must provide free of charge upon request to persons who, under the bill, may provide premarital counseling to persons who wish to enter into a covenant marriage, as well as to any other person who requests a copy.

For further information see the state and local fiscal estimate, which will be printed as an appendix to this bill.
